The botanical garden

Lily lamp can withstand the Nordic, cold climate and love to be placed in a dry, sunny location where it can shine undisturbed for years. It comes in different colors depending on its habitat. The lamp is similar to a flower in many ways, in daytime when the sun shines on it the color appears, and when it's dark the color disappears. I am walking in the middle of a big bed of flowers, sensing a sweet smell and total silence. Looking and taking pictures at all the colors and different shapes. I am visiting the most beautiful garden in Oslo, The Botanical Garden, founded in 1814, that contains about 7500 flower and plant species. Here you can get inspired or take a picnic beside the waterfalls. The main attraction is the Victoria water lily, a white lily that becomes colored in the middle after the first night they are open.

Grünerløkka

You have to come along and see Grünerløkka, our favorite district in Oslo. It's young, relaxed and caring; a perfect place for a Sunday stroll. This district is full of people walking around with a fresh cup of coffee, curiously chasing treasures among thousands of products at the 2nd markets. We like the idealistic idea of people passing on their old products to others and find it fascinating how 2nd hand products can be even more interesting than the brand new ones. Who was the previous owner of the product, and what clues did he leave in the object for you to find? We love to imagine a story behind 2nd hand object by looking for the clues you'll find in the well-used products. Finding materials that uncover the past or small details that we would like to bring to life again in future designs. This design is a tribute to some of the 2nd hand objects we found, loved and will pass on to you when the time is right to do so.
